British Engraving vs Japanese Engraving

On November 20th (Sun.) at the Shinko Studio Setagaya shop we will be holding a demonstration event with two engraving craftspeople, the British Castro Smith, and the Japanese Terumi Miyamoto, both of whom are highly skilled outstanding talents in their twenties.

All of the hand engraved works are bespoke, and so they also make extra special Christmas presents.

On the day, visitors will be able to see the differences between British and Japanese engraving, and we will also be taking orders for engraving initials etc. We also take requests for engraving Japanese hiragana and kanji characters.

Castro James Smith Engraver & Designer

Having undergone training at R.H. Wilkins engraving workshop in London's Hatton Garden, Castro's specialty is traditional coat of arms engraving techniques. He has won first prize at the Goldsmiths' Craft Awards, and as well as large pieces of silverwork like the Wimbledon trophy, he also engraves fine pieces like locket and rings. He is currently putting his efforts into creating pieces as a member of the Goldsmiths.

Terumi Miyamoto Engraver & Stone setter

Terumi graduated from the crafts course at the Tohoku University of Art and Design, and was engaged in Japanese engraving and diamond setting at a bespoke jewelry company. She currently works independently, taking requests from Japanese high-end jewelry brands. She is involved in a wide variety of activities, including teaching at metal engraving classes and workshops, and creating works.

We can see that the characters and designs vary considerably depending on the engraving technique, and with this circumstance we should also be able to get a feel for the differences in Europe and Japan's history and culture.
